

Briggs & Riley Presents: The Go Messenger Bag

Review By: Szilvia Gogh

Business, pleasure or anything in between, Briggs & Riley offers travel-ware collections designed for any road you travel. The Go Messenger Bag brings stylish versatility to tech-savvy, creative professionals on the move.

Travelers want lighter, stronger, more functional bags. This bag is exceptionally well designed and reliable. Looking at this product, it seems the engineers considered everything.

Pockets keep your gear neatly organized and easily accessible. There are perfectly thought-out places for your cell phone, PDA, iPod or MP3 player, business cards, flash drive/memory card. It has a removable, padded computer sleeve with elastic Velcro flap closure for extra protection, and it fits most 15 inch laptops.

I long looked for a versatile every-day bag—just like me. My lifestyle is a combination of adventure, professional, bohemian and academic. With the Go Messenger Bag by my side, laptop and documents inside, I can show up for business meetings. With the bag over my shoulder I can hike mountains and carry my camera accessories. Removing the laptop sleeve, I have enough room to pack my bag for a daytrip with snacks, cloths, book, iPod and other necessities. On my recent overseas travels I used the Messenger bag as my carry-on-item. I easily accessed my laptop at every checkpoint. I knew exactly which pocket contained my passport, cell phone, necessary travel documents, valet, water, chewing gum...

The front flap is secured by a buckle clip on one side and magnetic closure on the other, offering closure choices. The black exterior and orange-colored inside provide a stylish, hip look.

Some provide world class endurance to frequent business travelers, while others bring relaxed functionality to active leisure travelers. Wherever your travel takes you, the Go Messenger Bag is designed to complement your style, engineered to exceed your expectations, and built to last for a lifetime of journeys.
